QUESTIONS PRESENTED FOR REVIEW

1. Were the five petitioner foster children denied due process and equal protection of the laws when they were arbitrarily removed from a long-term foster home placement, separated from their siblings, and placed in the homes of strangers without any rights under Iowa law to a meaningful hearing?

2. Should the Iowa Supreme Court and trial court be permitted to evade federal questions and ignore federal rights asserted at both levels and sanction the attorney for raising them?

PARTIES

The petitioners in this Court are five foster children, A.C., A.C., S.C., S.C., and J.C., represented by their attorney and guardian ad litem, Jane Harlan. She was the appellant as the guardian ad litem for the children in the proceedings below. The respondents are the State of Iowa and K.C., the natural mother, whose rights were terminated in the proceedings below.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF IOWA

Petitioners pray that a writ of certiorari issue to review the decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa filed November 25, 1987.

OPINION BELOW

The decision of the Supreme Court of Iowa was filed on November 25, 1987, and is set forth in the Appendix, p. 1.

———o———

JURISDICTION

Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1257(3).

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This is an appeal by the attorney and guardian ad litem concerning the removal of five children from a long-term foster home placement. It involves a series of decisions by the trial court concerning the denial of an application for an injunction to prevent the removal, the trial court's removal of the children's attorney, and evasion by the trial court and Iowa Supreme Court of federal questions raised. The courts also imposed sanctions on the children's attorney for raising and asserting federal rights in the state courts for her clients and herself.

On March 22, 1985, the Iowa Department of Human Services petitioned the juvenile court that five children ranging in age from an infant to a 10 year old should be found children in need of assistance. They were placed with the M. foster family while their natural mother entered the hospital for psychiatric care. On the same day Jane Harlan was appointed attorney and guardian ad litem for the children. On May 13, 1985, the children were adjudicated to be children in need of assistance. In September of 1986, the Iowa Department of Human Services made plans to move the children to two separate foster homes in another community to be near their natural mother.

On September 8, 1986, the children's attorney filed an application for a temporary injunction to prevent the removal. She further requested termination of parental rights, and a rehearing as to disposition. The application for a temporary injunction to prevent the removal was denied with the court ruling that the children were not entitled to due process concerning such a decision.

The Iowa Administrative Code provides foster families with the right to meet with a district administrator of the Department of Human Services to challenge a removal decision. There is no opportunity for a hearing or court review. (See Appendix, p. 19).

In the instant case the children experienced a grievous loss due to the actions of the state. In anticipation of the move A.C. (1) and A.C. (2) attempted to purchase sleeping pills with plans of suicide in mind. A psychologist said that threats of suicide by A.C. (1) should be taken seriously. Another psychologist described the probable reaction of the children to a move as "traumatic". On January 2, 1987, the trial court denied the petition for termination of parental rights and recommended that the children be moved. On January 8, 1987, the five children were separated from each other and moved to the homes of strangers.

On January 21, 1987, the children's attorney filed a motion asking that the children be removed from the custody of the Department of Human Services at the upcoming disposition hearing. The application alleged that the Department had separated the children from each other, placed them in very restrictive environments; and that they had been denied free and unmonitored contact with each other, their psychological parents, and with their attorney. (See Appendix, p. 20).

Two days later the State moved that the attorney for the minor children be directed to withdraw as counsel for the children.

The trial court removed the children's attorney from continued representation of the children following a hearing in which she and the children were not notified of the issues to be raised in advance. Even though she asserted her First Amendment rights at the hearing, one of the reasons given for the removal was her discussion of public information about the case with the press. On March 24, 1987, the court issued an order summarily reducing her fees from $5,700.00 claimed to $500.00.

On appeal to the Supreme Court of Iowa, the appellate court issued a decision on November 25, 1987. Parental rights of the natural mother were terminated. The Supreme Court rejected the argument that the children's rights to due process or equal protection had been violated as raised in appellant's brief. It found no error in the court's determinations that the children's attorney be removed from representing them or the drastic reduction of her fees. The federal issues raised in appellant's brief were seen as devices to permit the children to maintain their relationship with the foster parents and therefore inconsequential. The court further found that the attorney should have filed a second notice of appeal concerning the federal issues even though she had been removed from the case, and ordered to not file anything further by the trial court during the appropriate time period. (See decision in Appendix, p. 16).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I

THE WRIT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE DECISION OF THE IOWA SUPREME COURT DENIED THE PETITIONERS THE RIGHT TO DUE PROCESS AND EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

The question of whether foster families have a liberty interest which merits constitutional protection was left open by the court in Smith v. Organization of Foster Families for Equality and Reform, 431 U.S. 816, 855 (1977). However the court recognized that

> "biological relationships are not exclusive determination of the existence of a family . . . the importance of the familial relationship, to the individuals involved and to the society stems from the emotional attachments that derive from the intimacy of daily association . . . At least where a child has been placed in foster care as an infant, has never known his natural parents, and has remained continuously for several years in the care of the same foster parents, it is natural that the foster family should hold the same place in the emotional life of the foster child, and fulfill the same socializing functions as the natural family. Smith

v. Organization of Foster Families for Equality and Reform, 431 U.S. 816, 843, 844.

The court has shifted in emphasis away from recognizing the mere existence of a biological link to one in which the responsibility actually assumed by a parent is regarded as a factor in determining the due process rights accorded. Lehr v. Robertson, 463 U.S. 248 (1983). Quilloin v. Walcott, 434 U.S. 246 (1978).

The procedural and substantive due process rights of foster parents and foster children have been increasingly recognized. Foster parents have been viewed as having standing to litigate issues concerning the children in their care. Smith v. Organization of Foster Families for Equality and Reform, 431 U.S. 816, 842, ft. 45(10b). In Re B.G., 523 P.2d 244, 253 (Cal. 1974). McLaughlin v. Pernsley, 654 F. Supp. 1567 (E.D. Pa., 1987). Scearce, 345 S.E.2d 404 (N.C. Ct. App., 1986).

Foster parents have been found to be entitled to due process concerning removal of foster children from their home and failure to recertify them as foster parents. Goldstein v. Lavine, 418 N.Y.S. 2d 845 (1979).

Protected liberty interests entitled to due process protection can arise under ~~state~~ law. In Brown v. County of San Joaquin, the court held as follows:

> "One source for the identification of protected liberty interests is state law. (footnotes omitted) When a state by its enactments creates the expectation that certain interests will be protected absent specified good cause, then the state must afford the individual procedural due process before upsetting that expectation. California law does create the expectation that > a foster family relationship of significant duration will be protected from arbitrary destruction. 601 F. Supp. 653, 658 (E.D. Cal., 1985).

Contrary to the language of the Iowa Supreme Court in its decision in the instant case, Iowa law similarly creates an expectation that a foster family relationship will not be arbitrarily destroyed. Iowa Statute Sec. 232.102(6) states as follows:

> "When the child is not returned to the child's home and if the child has been previously placed in a licensed foster care facility, the department or agency responsible for the placement of the child shall consider placing the child in the same licensed foster care facility.

The Iowa Supreme Court has repeatedly held that a stable environment is of primary importance for children. In Interest of Leehey, 317 N.W.2d 513, 516 (Iowa Ct. App., 1982). Having created an expectation of an enduring relationship in the foster family, the state must afford the parties to that relationship due process before it can be arbitrarily terminated.

Children are entitled to the equal protection of the laws with relation to other children. Brown v. Board of Education, 349 U.S. 294 (1954). The right to form a family relationship for an adult is considered to be a fundamental right. The United States Supreme Court has held that statutory classifications that discriminate against some adults concerning the right to marry are subject to "strict scrutiny" by the court because of the nature of the interest involved. Zablocki v. Redhail, 434 U.S. 374 (1978). The right to form family relationships is of the same or greater fundamental importance for a child as the right to marry is for an adult. Goldstein, Beyond the Best Interests of the Child, pp. 20-28. A small child cannot survive without a significant relationship with an adult caretaker. Children not involved in the foster care system are able to enter into family relationships without the fear that the state will destroy that relationship in the absence of good cause. Statutes and policies that deprive foster children of the right to enter into significant relationships without the interference of the state deprive foster children of the equal protection of the laws. They should be strictly scrutinized and required to advance a sufficiently important state interest before they can be upheld.

In the instant case the Iowa Supreme Court determined that attachments formed by children while in foster care could not be legally recognized because of the commitment of the State to returning children to the biological family. In the same decision they determined that the rights of the one significant biological parent should have been terminated. No doubt the Court felt that both decisions were made in the "best interests of the children."

II

THE WRIT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE DECISION OF THE IOWA SUPREME COURT FAILED TO RECOGNIZE ESTABLISHED PRINCIPLES OF FEDERAL LAW CONCERNING THE RIGHTS OF PERSONS IN THE CUSTODY OF THE STATE.

In Procunier v. Martinez, 416 U.S. 396, 417 (1974) the United States Supreme Court ruled that prisoners in the custody of the state have a liberty interest within the Fourteenth Amendment in receiving uncensored communication which is protected from arbitrary governmental invasion, and the right to have reasonable access to attorney services. Juveniles have rights to freedom of expression. Tinker v. Des Moines Independent Community School District, 393 U.S. 503 (1969). Juveniles in the custody of the state retain their First Amendment rights to uncensored contact with the outside world. Nelson v. Heyne, 355 F. Supp. 451, 457 (1972). Parents do not have the authority to authorize the state to limit a child's liberty without good cause. Milonas v. Williams, 691 F.2d 931, 943 (10th Cir., 1982). The United States Code requires that children in foster care be placed in the least restrictive environment. 42 U.S.C. § 675(5)(A).

The trial court evaded the above issues by removing the attorney who raised them. The Iowa Supreme Court considered the above issues inconsequential because they would have enabled the children to maintain a relationship with the foster parents. (See App. at p. 11).

III

THE WRIT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE DECISION OF THE IOWA SUPREME COURT CALLS FOR THE EXERCISE OF THE SUPREME COURT'S SUPERVISORY POWERS.

The decision making of the Iowa courts in this instance turns juvenile justice into a travesty. State agencies are permitted total discretion to eliminate the rights of the children in their care. Attorneys who attempt to work for their clients instead of the state can be removed from the case without any due process. Children can lose everything without any due process. Children can be held in "temporary" placements for years, with no right to have relationships formed during that period recognized by the court. Children with incompetent natural parents can be denied the opportunity to enter family relationships with anyone else. Visits between children and their attorneys can be monitored by the state. Attorneys who assert federal rights for their clients and themselves can be sanctioned by the court in response. Courts can engage in the questionable practice of making findings of fact that are totally unsupported by any evidence on the record.

The Iowa Supreme Court's decision flies in the face of most of the fundamental rights of persons as developed by the United States Supreme Court.

CONCLUSION

The writ should be granted because the decision of the Iowa Supreme Court has fundamental implications concerning the rights of thousands of children in the nation's foster care system. Children are the nation's most important natural resource. Children in foster care have a strong likelihood of coming from troubled families. Foster children have already lost their traditional relationship with their biological parents. While the goal of reuniting the natural family is an admirable one, it cannot justify the deprivation of a small child from forming any family relationships for extended periods. When courts focus on biological factors and exclude actual relationships, they perform a terrible disservice to children.

This case involves more than the traditional disputes over the fine points of federal law. It involves questions of whether a class of persons known as foster children are entitled to any constitutional protections whatsoever.

Appeal from the Iowa District Court for Jasper County, Thomas W. Mott, District Associate Judge.

Juvenile proceeding, including a petition to terminate parent-child relationship. AFFIRMED IN PART, REVERSED IN PART, AND REMANDED.

Jane A. Harlan, Newton, for appellants.

Gerald B. Feuerhelm, Des Moines, for appellee natural mother.

Thomas J. Miller, Attorney General, Gordon E. Allen, Deputy Attorney General, Charles K. Phillips, Assistant Attorney General, John Billingsley, County Attorney, and Clifford D. Wendel, Assistant County Attorney, for the State.

Considered by Harris, P.J., and Larson, Schultz, Lavorato, and Neuman, JJ.

HARRIS, P.J.

Five children, ranging in age from three months to ten years, were voluntarily placed under foster care by their mother on March 14, 1985. The placement soon became involuntary and this dispute centers around efforts by the Iowa department of human services to rehabilitate the mother and conflicting efforts by the foster parents to wrest the children from both their mother and the department. The district court, sitting as juvenile court, determined that efforts to help the mother to acquire parenting skills should continue. Hence the juvenile court rejected a petition to terminate the parent-child relationship. The court also rejected claims that custody of the children should remain with the foster parents. We think the parent-child relationship with the mother should be terminated.[1] We agree with the juvenile court's rejection of the other claims.

It is readily apparent why the mother felt driven to voluntarily place the children into foster care and why the department felt compelled to resist her attempts to withdraw the placement. The mother suffers from a bipolar mental illness which causes an antisocial personality. She was hospitalized for this condition in Newton from March 1985 until May 15, 1985. She was then admitted to a group care facility at Ames, where she stayed until August 1986. She was thereafter removed to a halfway house in Cedar Rapids where she remained under counseling at the time of the hearing in juvenile court.

[1]None of the children's three fathers are party to this action or appeal.

The evidence is overwhelming that, because of the mother's tragic condition, the children were physically neglected and abused. The children were ill-fed and were for the most part compelled to rely on one another for routine care and feeding. A department social worker described the mother's house as it appeared in early 1985:

> The home was in substandard condition. There were windows broken out of the home.

The same witness earlier testified:

> There was no food present in the house for the children particularly the infant child, [J.C.], who is three or four months old at this time. There was dog feces laying around the home which three year old [S.C.] proceeded to track around the whole house while we were there talking about placing the children. It's the worst cockroach situation I have ever seen. They were crawling on the walls in broad daylight which is not real typical, in everything we opened it was just infested with cockroaches. There were dirty dishes and clothing piled up around the house. We couldn't find any clothing to take for any of the five children that day, not even a pair of socks to put on [S.C.] to leave with.

The witness did express the opinion that the mother was not incapable of parenting the children but, when asked whether there was any way to scale her parenting abilities, replied: "On a motivational scale I think she is real high. I don't know how she would place on an abilities scale."

The two eldest children are bitterly hostile to their mother because of the neglect and because of violent physical abuse heaped upon the children by the mother and one of the mother's boyfriends. They related how one of the children's hair was pulled out by the mother. They also described beatings by the mother with a board and with a chain dog leash.

The mother is remorseful over her treatment of the children. She attributes her conduct, which she feels the children exaggerated, to her illness. At the time of her testimony she believed her illness was being controlled by medication and the counseling she was then receiving at the halfway house. She conceded, however, she was not yet well.

Professional witnesses, testify in the mother's behalf, were only cautiously optimistic about the mother's chance of improving. A psychiatrist familiar with the case testified:

> A bipolar illness is a cyclical illness. It means that it comes and goes. And a person can go through life and have several cycles or episodes of the disease, and all of a sudden it will go away. It may not reappear again, and it may reappear. It is hard to say. So . . . the medication is usually used to abate the cycle that a person is already in. It's possible that she could even go off her medicine and do well for the rest of her life. It's possible that she could go off her medicine and get sick again, or it's possible she could stay on her medicine and do well. It's really hard, because we can't predict the course of the illness. But as long as she maintains contact with somebody—and we know what medications now work because she's been on the medicine, so her prognosis can be good, and she can become functional again.
> Q. Do you have any impression as to her potential for being able to care for five children? A. Well, that's a difficult question for me to answer as a psy> chiatrist. In my last two contacts with her, it's my feeling that there's not—there is no psychiatric reason now why she should not be able to care for her children. I certainly would not want to jump into it immediately. I would like—I think it should be something that is gradually done. But I have a lot of people who are bipolar patients who take their medication and do quite well as mothers and fathers. So long as she maintains herself on the medicine and she appears well and has contact with somebody who can assess how she's doing, I think it's possible.

No psychologist, psychiatrist, or other expert testified that the natural mother would be able to take care of her children in the near future. At best, from the mother's point of view, they merely testified there was no psychological reason she could not.

The department placed the children in the temporary care of Larry and Paula Mick, where they remained for about eighteen months. Not unexpectedly, in view of the children's past environment, a strong bond soon developed between the children and the Micks. The bonding was no accident. We emphatically agree with the juvenile court's conclusion that the Micks resolutely set out to make the temporary placement a permanent one, a charge they and the children deny.

I. Jane A. Harlan, a Newton lawyer who is a second cousin of Larry Mick, was appointed guardian ad litem for the children and in that capacity brought this proceeding under Iowa Code chapter 232 to terminate the relationship between the children and their natural parents.[2] The juvenile court's refusal to terminate the relationship is the first and principal issue in the case.

The juvenile court found that the mother could resume her parental role. It was persuaded by testimony that the natural mother, through medication and counseling, was able to control her mental illness and there was no reason she could not take care of her children.

Iowa Code section 232.116(5) (1985) states that the court may order termination of the parent-child relationship if it finds:

> a. The child has been adjudicated a child in need of assistance pursuant to section 232.96; and
>
> b. The custody of the child has been transferred from the child's parents for placement pursuant to section 232.102 for at least twelve of the last eighteen months; and
> c. There is clear and convincing evidence that the child cannot be returned to the custody of the child's parents as provided in section 232.102.

Of these three requirements there is no question here that (a) the children were adjudicated children in need of assistance, and (b) custody of the children was transferred from the natural mother for placement for at least twelve of the last eighteen months.

The provision at issue here is (c). We must examine the record to determine whether there was clear and con-

[2]Incredibly, the guardian ad litem failed or neglected to secure adequate service of notice on any of the three fathers of the children. This inexcusable failure seems highly likely to further aggravate the children's problems because a final permanent disposition must accommodate the various fathers' rights.

vincing evidence that the children cannot be returned to the mother's custody.

We explained in In re T.D.C., 336 N.W.2d 738 (Iowa 1983):

> Several previously enunciated principles have served to guide our examination of the record before us. Appellate review of the proceedings to terminate a parent-child relationship is de novo; thus "it is our duty to review the facts as well as the law and adjudicate rights anew on those propositions properly preserved and presented to us." We accord weight to the fact findings of the juvenile court, especially when considering the credibility of the witnesses whom the court heard and observed firsthand, but we are not bound by those findings.
> Central to a determination of this nature are the best interests of the child. In this connection we look to the child's long range as well as immediate interest. Hence, we necessarily consider what the future likely holds for the child if returned to his or her parents. Insight for this determination can be gained from evidence of the parent's past performance, for that performance may be indicative of the quality of the future care that parent is capable of providing.

Id. at 740-41 (quoting In re Dameron, 306 N.W.2d 743, 745 (Iowa 1981)) (citations omitted).

The State has the duty to assure that every child within its borders receives proper care and treatment, and must intercede when parents fail to provide it. In re Dameron, 306 N.W.2d at 745. Our current statutory provisions are preventative as well as remedial. Id. Child custody should be quickly fixed and little disturbed. In re Kester, 228 N.W.2d 107, 110 (Iowa 1975). Children should not be made to suffer indefinitely in parentless limbo. Id.

In determining whether there is clear and convincing evidence that the children cannot be returned to the care of their mother, we are not to engage in a comparison of the mother's home with the foster home. We have said:

> Presumably every foster home will provide good care. The parent's right to have a child returned, however, is not measured by comparing the parent's home to the foster home or an ideal home. Rather the parent's right is established by negating the risk of recurrence of harm.

In re Blackledge, 304 N.W.2d 209, 214-15 (Iowa 1981).

There are a number of stern realities faced by a juvenile judge in any case of this kind. Among the most important is the relentless passage of precious time. The crucial days of childhood cannot be suspended while parents experiment with ways to face up to their own problems. Neither will childhood await the wanderings of judicial process. The child will continue to grow, either in bad or unsettled conditions or in the improved and permanent shelter which ideally, at least, follows the conclusion of a juvenile proceeding.

The law nevertheless demands a full measure of patience with troubled parents who attempt to remedy a lack of parenting skills. In view of this required patience, certain steps are prescribed when termination of the parent-child relationship is undertaken under Iowa Code chapter 232. But, beyond the parameters of chapter 232, patience with parents can soon translate into intolerable hardship for their children.

Our statutory scheme for protecting the rights of natural parents in termination proceedings was carefully crafted as a legislative response to federal court decisions which held our prior parental termination statutes unconstitutional. See Alsager v. District Court, 406 F. Supp. 10 (S.D. Iowa 1975), aff'd, 545 F.2d 1137 (8th Cir. 1976). Although it was incumbent upon our legislature to react to these holdings it would be wrong for our courts to thereafter overreact to them.

It is unnecessary to take from the children's future any more than is demanded by statute. Stated otherwise, plans which extend the twelve-month period during which parents attempt to become adequate in parenting skills should be viewed with a sense of urgency. Of course some suggested extensions will prove to be appropriate. The judge considering them should however constantly bear in mind that, if the plan fails, all extended time must be subtracted from an already shortened life for the children in a better home.

Expert testimony suggested that a continued relationship with the mother could be justified at least in part because the children need to face up to the extreme hostility they feel. According to the testimony, the children must work through and resolve their bitter resentment of their mother. We in no way disparage the view that serious hostile feelings and resentments are matters to be dealt with. We are nevertheless convinced that these children should not for that reason alone be returned to their mother. For the children, the cure would be much worse than the disease. Another way must be found to help them deal with their resentments.

In view of the availability of the department's efforts in her behalf, it is not controlling here that the mother has no home, no money, no current skills, no job and no real prospects of acquiring any. What is of controlling importance is her total inability to mother the children. It seems inescapable to us that the mother has no realistic chance to become adequately equipped to care for these children during the years remaining in their childhood. Her mental illness, though cruelly unfair from her point of view, continues a threat to those around her. She has shown she cannot care for herself, much less for five children.

It is past time to terminate her relationship with the children. We order it done.

II. Ms. Harlan was removed as guardian ad litem following the proceedings in juvenile court but, as attorney for the children, assigns error in rulings which she considers adverse to the children's rights to maintain their relationship with the foster parents. We find no error in assignments.

Our review of ordinary custody cases is de novo. In re Blackledge, 304 N.W.2d 209, 210 (Iowa 1981). We employ the same scope of review in children-in-need-of-assistance proceedings under section 232.102. In re J.R.H., 358 N.W.2d 311, 317 (Iowa 1984). Of course the Micks' situation as foster parents distinguishes this proceeding from the ordinary custody dispute.

There is a pressing societal need for temporary foster homes. The child victims of abuse are in desperate need of shelter and care. During the time required for courts or officials to procees and consider their needs, the children must be nurtured in a safe environment.

It should be apparent that one of the paramount needs of a child living under the stress of such unfortunate circumstances is to be free from direct or indirect proposals by those sheltering them to make the association permanent. To some it may seem innocent, even a good thing, to offer a permanent love to the child under temporary care. But unselfish temporary parents recognize that such a bonding is not kind. On the contrary it tends to be selfish on the part of the adults and is highly likely to be harmful to the child.

Temporary foster relationships must be designed with the knowledge they will almost certainly end in separation. The children often return to their natural parents. Often another solution must be found. Separation from foster parents holds the potential to be a painful experience. Such a separation would become unnecessarily cruel if the foster parents have led the children to believe placement in their home was permanent.

We agree with the juvenile court's conclusion that it was in the best interests of the children to change their placement from the Micks. Parental rights of the mother were very much in issue at the time placement was ordered changed. The three fathers of the children were not yet subject to the court's jurisdiction. Options for the children's future had to be kept open. It was crucial that the children be under the care of foster parents who could and would refrain from seeking to bond a permanent relationship.

III. We also find no due process violation in moving the children from the Micks' home. It is contended that the children have a constitutionally protected liberty interest in a permanent living situation, a facet of the right to family privacy.

In order to make out a claim of deprivation of fourteenth amendment due process rights, a person must show: (1) deprivation of a liberty interest protected by the fourteenth amendment; and (2) the procedure used to deprive that interest was constitutionally deficient. Board of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 569-71, 92 S. Ct. 2701, —, 33 L. Ed. 2d 548, 556-57 (1972). The United States Supreme Court has stated that liberty denotes not merely freedom from bodily restraint but also freedom to marry, to establish a home and to bring up children. Meyer v. Nebraska, 262 U.S. 390, 399, 43 S. Ct. 625, —, 67 L. Ed. 2d 1042, 1045 (1922).

State statutes may create liberty interests which are entitled to due process. Vitek v. Jones, 445 U.S. 480, 488, 100 S. Ct. 1254, —, 63 L. Ed. 2d 552, 561-62 (1980). When no right or justifiable expectation is created a state can act without providing due process. See, e.g., Meachum v. Fano, 427 U.S. 215, 228, 96 S. Ct. 2532, —, 49 L. Ed. 2d 451, 461 (1976).

In Smith v. Organization of Foster Families for Equality and Reform, 431 U.S. 816, 97 S. Ct. 2094, 53 L. Ed. 2d 14 (1977), the court declined to decide whether a liberty interest exists in foster family relationships. Other authorities indicate that it does not. See Kyees v. County Dep't of Pub. Welfare, 600 F. 2d 693, 698 (7th Cir. 1979); Drummond v. Fulton County Dep't of Family and Children's Servs., Inc., 563 F.2d 1200, 1207 (5th Cir. 1977). But see Brown v. City of San Joaquin, 601 F. Supp. 653, 662 (E.D. Cal. 1985).

Under these authorities the key question becomes whether Iowa law creates the expectation that the foster family relationship will be permitted to continue after the children have resided with foster parents for a certain period of time. Iowa law clearly does not create such an expectation.

As we have tried to make clear, the child in foster placement needs first of all to reach a good permanent placement. Time is of the essence. We have already learned of the harm that results to the children by the agonizing delays in our existing process. It would be decidedly antagonistic to the children's best interests to erect another panoply of due process rights for still another group, to be litigated and appealed before there could be a resolution of the children's plight.

We reject the due process challenge.

IV. The former guardian ad litem contends the removal of the children from the foster home denied them equal protection of the laws. It is argued that statutes and policies applied here deprived the foster children of the right to enter into significant relationships without state interference, a right that would not be denied children who were not involved with foster care.

At the threshold of any equal protection claim it is necessary to decide the type of scrutiny to be given the challenged activity. Mills v. State, 308 N.W.2d 65, 66 (Iowa 1981). Strict scrutiny is employed only when a fundamental right or suspect class is involved. Veach v.

Iowa Dept's of Transp., 374 N.W.2d 248, 249 (Iowa 1985). Suspect classifications are generally based on race, alienage or national origin. State v. Martin, 383 N.W.2d 556, 559 (Iowa 1986). Strict scrutiny requires that a compelling interest be served by the discrimination. Johnson v. Charles City Community Schools Bd. of Educ., 368 N.W.2d 74, 84-85 (Iowa), cert. denied, — U.S. — (1985). If the classification does not involve a fundamental right or a suspect class, it is subject to the rational basis test. Veach, 374 N.W.2d at 249. Under the rational basis test, a class distinction will survive if it rationally furthers a legitimate state interest. Id. The nature of the scrutiny to be employed here does not change the outcome. The challenge fails under either test.

The rational basis test is easily passed. Temporary foster homes rationally further the state's legitimate interest in maintaining children in a relationship with their natural parents. Removal from a temporary home does the same thing.

The strict scrutiny test is also passed. As noted, under a strict scrutiny test the first question is whether there is a compelling state interest in the classification. When adults can show they will be good parents to their children the state has a compelling interest in reuniting the children with those parents, even when the children have become attached to foster parents.

The second question under the strict scrutiny test is whether removing children from a foster home which discourages reunification is necessary to achieve the state's interest in preserving the children's relationship with their natural parents. We think the answer is clearly yes.

The equal protection challenge is without merit.

V. The former guardian ad litem urges a number of other assignments, only some of which are appropriate for appellate review. We find no merit in a challenge to a discretionary ruling which rejected a motion to remove the natural mother's attorney from the case. Certain motions were filed after jurisdiction in juvenile court had been lost by the bringing of this appeal. Hulsing v. Iowa Nat'l Mut. Ins. Co., 329 N.W.2d 5, 7 (Iowa 1983). We give them no consideration.

The children's attorney, who was removed as their guardian ad litem, protests the allowance of only $500 of the $5700 she claimed for legal services. The order setting fees was discretionary. Hulse v. Wifat, 306 N.W.2d 707, 709 (Iowa 1981). We find no abuse.

Compensation should be fixed much the same as in criminal cases: for "the time necessarily spent, the nature and extent of the services, . . . responsibility assumed and results obtained, the standing and experience of the attorney in the profession, . . . the customary charges for similar services" and the certainty of payment from the public treasury. Hulse, 306 N.W.2d at 711.

A number of factors support the trial court's exercise of discretion. The quality of the services was poor. We have already noted that jurisdiction was not obtained over the fathers. We have received for filing the disciplinary commission's public reprimand of Ms. Harlan for professional misconduct in these proceedings for making extrajudicial statements. As we have mentioned, she is the second cousin of Mr. Mick, the foster father. She should not be compensated as attorney for the children for any efforts which were expended to further the private wishes or interests of the Micks. We find no abuse in the finding that $500 was the value of that part of her services which were necessarily expended in representing the children.

To detail other contentions would unduly extend this opinion. We order termination of the parental relationship between the children and their natural mother. We remand the case to juvenile court with directions that the department proceed immediately to seek jurisdiction over the natural fathers of the children and, as soon as possible, to obtain a permanent resolution of their placement.

274 In re A.C.

NEUMAN, J. (dissenting).

I concur in divisions II through V of the majority opinion, but I respectfully dissent from division I.

By characterizing the juvenile court's action as no more than a protracted effort "to help the mother acquire parenting skills," the majority has, in my opinion, minimized the tragedy of this case. What the juvenile court in fact recognized—along with every other expert who testified—was K.C.'s extraordinary effort to overcome a debilitating mental illness which virtually destroyed her ability to care for herself, let alone five children, until proper diagnosis made recovery a possibility.

Because this mother, through no fault of her own, has not progressed in her recovery at the speed the majority's timetable would suggest, her parental rights are being irrevocably terminated. By choosing this extraordinary remedy, the majority has substituted its judgment for that of every expert called to testify, whether by the State or Jane Harlan. All pointed to reunification of the family as not only the most desirable goal, but one that was realistically attainable. All cited the tremendous strides K.C. has made in achieving that goal. Not one proposed termination of parental rights as being in the best interest of the C. children.

A year has now passed since this case was heard by the juvenile court. Intervening events may prove the majority's prediction of K.C.'s incapacities correct. But our task is to affirm or reverse the judgment of the juvenile court based on the evidence before it. Under this record, I would have affirmed the court's dismissal of the termination petition.

IOWA ADMINISTRATIVE CODE

§ 202.13(3) If a foster family objects in writing within seven (7) days from the date that the information of plans to remove the child is mailed, the district administrator shall grant a conference to the foster family to determine that the removal is in the child's best interest.

This conference shall not be construed to be a contested case under the Iowa administrative procedure Act, Iowa Code chapter 17A.

The conference shall be provided before the child is removed except in instances listed in 202.13(1) "a" through "c". The district administrator shall review the propriety of the removal and explain the decision to the foster family.

The district administrator, on finding that the removal is not in the child's best interests, may overrule the removal decision unless a court order or parental decision prevents the department from doing so.

IN THE IOWA DISTRICT COURT FOR JASPER COUNTY

(JUVENILE DIVISION)

IN THE INTEREST OF A.C., A.C., S.C., S.C., and J.C. Minor Children.	Juvenile No. J5-411a APPLICATION FOR MODIFICATION OF DISPOSITIONAL ORDER.

(Filed January 21, 1987)

Comes now the guardian ad litem for the children and states as follows:

1. On June 6, 1985, the court entered a dispositional order placing the children in the temporary care, custody, and control of the Department of Human Services.

2. Employees and agents of the Department of Human Services have repeatedly failed to protect and promote the best interests of the children since that time.

3. The children were involuntarily removed from the foster home of L. and P.M. on January 8, 1987, contrary to their best interests.

4. Since that time the children have been separated from each other and placed in very restrictive environments.

5. The children have been denied free and unmonitored contact with each other, their psychological parents, L. and P.M. and with their attorney.

6. A.C.1 and A.C.2 have been repeatedly threatened with institutionalization even though they are not proper subjects for such an action.

7. Said actions by the Department have constituted psychological abuse of the children, and are completely without any justification which relates to the best interests of the children.

WHEREFORE, the guardian ad litem for the children prays that the care and custody of the children be transferred from the Department of Human Services to their former foster parents, L. and P.M.

IN THE INTEREST OF	•	S.Ct. No. 87-43
A.C., A.C., S.C., S.C., and J.C.,	•	RESPONSE TO STATEMENT IN RESPONSE TO ORDER OF AUGUST 18, 1987
Children.	•

COMES NOW the Appellee-State and, in response to the statement of the guardian ad litem regarding her continuing participation in this appeal, states as follows:

1. That the State does not contest the guardian ad litem's statements to the effect that:

a. The guardian ad litem has represented the children for two years;

b. The guardian ad litem is familiar with the case;

c. The guardian ad litem has represented the express wishes of the two oldest children;

d. That no party to this appeal, or to the lower court jnvenile action, has objected to her continued representation on this appeal;

e. That the current guardian ad litem briefly appeared in this matter, and then withdrew his appearance, apparently in contemplation that the matter would be handled by the previous guardian ad litem.

f. That this office may have stated to the Jasper County Attorney's Office that it was not planning to raise the removal issue.

g. That the lower court did not specify whether the removal was intended to effect the existing appeal.

2. The Appellee-State does deny the statements:

a. That the removal of the guardian ad litem was "under questionable circumstances". See Appellee's Brief, Division VII.

b. That the question of the propriety of the removal of the guardian ad litem was properly preserved for appeal. See Appellee's Brief, Division VII.

c. That the children are currently being "held" in an unsatisfactory situation, or a situation that violates their rights. Absent a motion for stay, such an allegation is improper, as the State would be required to go beyond the existing appellate record to respond to it.

3. The State does not resist continued participation by former guardian ad litem Jane Harlan because:

a. There would be a value to the juvenile justice system to have this matter adjudicated on the merits. Removal of this particular attorney may mean removal of the only party in favor of reversal.

b. The State wishes to avoid the actuality of, or the appearance of, obtaining a favorable resolution of this matter by the elimination of the only dissenting party.

c. The chief ground for removal of the guardian ad litem was that the guardian ad litem was not acting in the children's best interests. (App. 939-940.) That ground may not require her elimination as appellate counsel, as opposing view points concerning the children's welfare are being fully represented on this appeal.

WHEREFORE, the Appellee-State does not object to the continuation of this appeal with current counsel.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

I. Did the Iowa Supreme Court err in ruling that the trial court acted properly when it approved the removal of five children from the foster home which was disruptive of their relationship with their biological parent.

II. Did the Iowa Supreme Court disregard principles of federal law concerning the rights of persons in the custody of the State.

III. Does this case present a context for exercise of the United States Supreme Court's supervisory powers.

PARTIES

The petitioner in this matter is the former guardian ad litem of five children who have been subject to Iowa child in need of assistance proceedings. The guardian ad litem represented the children through several years of such proceedings and was ultimately successful in obtaining the termination of their mother's parental rights. The rights of the fathers were not terminated as they were not properly served. On February 17, 1987, the petitioner, Ms. Harlan, was removed as guardian ad litem by the trial court, which found that her representation was harmful to the children. (Iowa Supreme Court App. 939.)

Accordingly, the parties in this matter are the former guardian ad litem, the State of Iowa, and, at least nominally, the three natural fathers whose rights have not been terminated.

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF IOWA

JURISDICTION

The respondent accepts the jurisdictional statement prepared by the petitioner. (Petition, p. 2.)

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, section 1, states:

All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and > subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

Iowa Code section 232.102(6) (1985) states:

> In any order transferring custody to the department or any agency, or in orders pursuant to a custody order, the court shall specify the nature and category of disposition which will serve the best interests of the child, and shall prescribe the means by which the placement shall be monitored by the court. If the court orders the transfer of the custody of the child to the department of human services or other agency for placement, the department or agency shall submit a case permanency plan to the court and shall make every effort to return the child to the child's home as quickly as possible. When the child is not returned to the child's home and if the child has been previously placed in a licensed foster care facility, the department or agency shall consider placing the child in the same licensed foster care facility. If the court orders the transfer of custody to a relative or other suitable person, the court may direct the department or other agency to provide services to the child's parent, guardian or custodian in order to enable them to resume custody of the child.

441 Iowa Administrative Code 7.5(5) states, in part:

> Where no hearing is granted. No hearing will be granted on the following issues:

* * *

d. The removal of children from or placement in a specific foster care setting.

STATEMENT OF CASE

This matter began with child abuse investigations in 1984 and 1985. Allegations were made that K.C. was abusing and neglecting her children A.C.1, A.C.2, S.C.1, S.C.2 and J.C. Investigtions revealed that K.C. had mental health problems and did not provide adequate shelter or food for the children. She let them wander about unsupervised and improperly clothed, and, on at least one occasion, physically abused one of them. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 12-13, 17.)

The children were voluntarily placed in foster care on March 22, 1985, in the home of L.M. and P.M. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 3.) A child in need of (CHINA) assistance petition was filed that day alleging that K.C. failed to adequately supervise her children, or provide them with adequate food, clothing and shelter. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 3.) The petition was later amended to add the additional CHINA grounds of physical abuse, and of the parent desiring to be relieved of the children's care. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 7-8.) K.C., meanwhile, was admitted to the mental health unit at a local hospital.

About two weeks after the foster care placement, K.C. wrote a letter requesting that her children be returned when she was released from the hospital. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 3-4.) An application for temporary removal was filed in response to that request. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 3.) In the first court order in this matter, Judge Thomas Mott granted that application, finding that K.C. continued to require hospitalization, and had lost her home during her hospital stay. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 25-26.)

At the temporary removal hearing there was a dispute over visitation. The Department of Human Services felt visitation would be safe and should occur. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 17.) The guardian ad litem stated that the children didn't want visitation and felt it should not be forced. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 18-19.) The court declined to interfere with the Department's discretion in this matter, noting that it was wary of being manipulated by the children's expressed wishes. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 20.)

The CHINA adjudication hearing was held on May 13, 1985. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 27.) An order was issued four days later. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 54.) In the order Judge Mott found that there were five C. children, aged five months to ten years. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 54.) He found that they had been neglected, abused, and inadequately supervised and sheltered. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 55-56.)

The dispositional hearing was held in June of 1985. Before the hearing, the Department of Human Services filed a dispositional report which was later admitted into evidence. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 58.) It noted that K.C. had transferred to the Center for Personal Development in Ames, Iowa. (Court Report of 6/5/85, p. 1.) It was anticipated that she would require care there for an extended period of time. (Court Report of 6/5/85, p. 1.) The report stated that the children's natural fathers had shown no interest in gaining custody of the children. (Court Report of 6/5/85, p. 1.) Social worker Kathy Thompson recommended foster care. (Court Report of 6/5/85, pp. 1-2.) At the hearing all the parties concurred with this recommendation, and the court entered an order accordingly. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 58-59.) At this time the two oldest girls were displaying hostility towards their mother, and towards reunification. (Court Report of 12/13/85, p. 1.) K.C. was making "excellent" progress in her placement in Ames. (Court Report of 12/13/85, p. 2.)

On January 6, 1986, after a December 16, 1985 review hearing, Judge Mott issued an order approving continued foster care. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 67-68.) Just prior to the hearing the guardian ad litem had filed a motion to modify the dispositional order so as to remove the Department as custodian of the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 65.) The motion was based on the Department's insistence on the maintenance of visits with the natural mother, and the goal of reunification. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 65.) The motion was apparently dropped. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 614-615.)

The next six-month review hearing was scheduled for July of 1986. Before the hearing, Psychologist Rex Shahriari filed a report. His report contained the first hints of the developments that would change the nature of this case. Dr. Shahriari had examined the records and evaluations of this case, and conducted a three-hour visit with the children at the home of the foster parents. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 980.) He was positively impressed with the foster home. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 981.) He found that the home more than adequately met the children's material and physical needs. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 981.) There was a significant bonding between the foster parents and the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 981.) However, Dr. Shahriari also noted that the foster parents discussed K.C.'s competence as a parent in "open and frank" discussions with the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 981.) He stated that the foster parents showed questionable judgment in this regard, and that their comments regarding K.C.'s competency "has and will continue to cause them anxiety, mistrust and fear of their biological parent". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 981.) He opined that the foster parents had, perhaps unwittingly "berated" K.C., "with the net effect being that the chances of the children having a positive relationship with their biological mother is reduced". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 982.) He noted that the "openness and frankness" of the discussions seemed to be "circumscribed to [K.C.'s] in-adequacies" (Iowa S.Ct. App. 982), and that during the discussions, the oldest children were very quiet and attentive and tended to echo the foster parents' opinions. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 982.)

At this time K.C. was attempting to decide whether to join a residential program in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, designed to lead to independent living. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 977.) Social Worker Kathy Thompson stated that if K.C. did not join the program, she would be provided with numerous services designed to aid in the return and transition of the children to the home. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 977.) At this time, increased visitation with the children was occurring. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 977.)

At the July 28, 1986 hearing, the court continued the children's placement in foster care, and set the matter for another review in six months. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 69-70.)

That hearing was precluded by several developments occurring in September of 1986. On September 15, 1986, the Department of Human Services sent a "10 day notice" terminating the children's placement with the foster parents. The placement was being terminated because of a lack of cooperation with the case plan, and because the children's best interest demanded placement elsewhere. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 75.)

The children's guardian ad litem filed an "application for temporary injunction, termination of parental rights, and rehearing as to disposition". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 71.) The application alleged that the Department of Human Services had engaged in emotional and psychological abuse of the children by repeatedly "threatening" them that they would eventually return to the care of the natural mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 72.) The application alleged that the children were best off in the care of the foster parents, who would eventually seek to adopt them. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 73.) The application requested, inter alia: (a) a restraining order preventing the Department from moving the children; (b) a transfer of custody from the Department to the foster parents; (c) permission for the guardian ad litem to seek a termination of parental rights. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 73-74.) The application was followed shortly by a brief stating that "leading experts on the subject of child custody and placement feel that bonding between foster children and long-term caretakers should be legally recognized as a common law adoption, and should not be disrupted within the standards of the court's protection of the best interests of the children." (Iowa S.Ct. App. 77.)

The attorney for the natural mother resisted the application for an injunction. (Answer and Resistance filed 9/15/86.) The resistance stated that continued placement in the home of the foster parents may not be in the best interests of the children, and that the foster parents had been aware of concerns over the placement since early 1986. (Answer and Resistance filed 9/15/86.) In the resistance the natural mother also requested a hearing to determine if the guardian ad litem should be disqualified. (Answer and Resistance filed 9/15/86.) The natural mother alleged that the commonly accepted goal of the juvenile court is the reunification of the family, and that the guardian ad litem had indicated very early on in the case that her goal was termination of parental rights. (Answer and Resistance filed 9/15/86.) She alleged that the actions of the guardian ad litem were biased in favor of the current foster parents. (Answer and Resistance filed 9/15/86.)

The application for a temporary injunction came on for hearing on September 26, 1986. A teacher of one of the children stated that removal from the placement might cause the children emotional harm. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 99.) A school nurse said the children were receiving better care now than they were in their natural mother's care. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 108.)

Psycholgist Eva Christiansen, who evaluated the children, testified on behalf of the children. When asked if the Department of Human Services' threat to remove the children was a good acton, she stated, "It may not be a good action. It may be a necessary action". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 118.) She stated that the case was at a point where a decision had to be made to remove or keep the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 125.) Dr. Christiansen stated that she had met with the foster parents in late 1985 or early 1986 regarding their foster parent role. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 122.) She said they had been startled by her recommendations as how to proceed, especially as to cooperating with the Department. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 122, 131.) Dr. Christiansen stated that she had become aware "really immediately" that the foster parents were interested in maintaining a permanent parental role for the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 123.) She stated that, ethically, the only way she could work with them in therapy was to work with them on their goal. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 124.) Thus, she recommended cooperation with the parent and the Department, so that if termination did occur they would be the persons most likely to get the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 124.) Dr. Christiansen described the foster parents' negative feelings towards the natural mother and described their relationship with the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 128.) Dr. Christiansen stated that there were certain aspects of that relationship that were tighter than that of a normal parent-child relationship. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 130.) She attributed this to the desperation of the children for a normal family life, and to foster parents' willingness to offer that sort of relationship, a willingess that not only went beyond what one would want in successful foster parenting, but also went beyond what one would want in successful parenting. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 129-130.) She stated that there was an aspect of mutual desperation in the relationship (Iowa S.Ct. App. 129), and that that relationship interfered with the children's ability to reunite with the mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 132.)

Dr. Rex Shahriari, who had submitted the earlier report, also testified. He reiterated his concerns regarding the effect the foster parents were having on reunification efforts. He stated that during his visit to the foster home there had been "quite a bit of berating" of the natural mother, and much reiteration and commenting upon her past behavior. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 184.) He felt this created considerable anxiety for the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 184.) He stated that if this berating was of an ongoing nature, it would reduce the possibility of the children having a positive relationship with their mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 185.) When asked if the foster parents would have a motivation for harming this relationship, he speculated that if there was a desire to adopt the children, the probability of adoption would increase if a wedge could be driven between mother and children (Iowa S.Ct. App. 186.) He testified that despite the foster parents' lack of psychological training, it would not be unrealistic to be able to expect them to be able to separate their feelings so a positive image could be projected of the mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 189.)

L.M., foster father, testified. He denied saying bad things about K.C. to the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 193-194.) He conceded that he would like to adopt them. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 194-195.) He stated that the children had a negative attitude towards K.C. from the first day of placement, and had always called the foster parents mom and dad. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 203.) He testified regarding his two recent arrests on operating while intoxicated charges. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 124.)

P.M., the foster mother, testified. She stated she would like to keep the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 217.) She stated that she encouraged a positive image of the biological mother and that even if she were able to adopt the children, she would not cut the mother out of their lives. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 218.)

On October 1, 1986, the application to enjoin the children's custodian from placing the children outside the M. home was denied. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 235.) On October 2, 1987, the natural mother filed a motion to dismiss the petition to terminate parental rights, the motion being predicated on the fact that, under Iowa law, a guardian ad litem is not authorized to file a petition to terminate parental rights. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 236.) On October 14th, the court retroactively authorized the guardian ad litem to file a petition, holding that her contentions should be resolved on the merits. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 240-241.)

A hearing date was set for the motion to terminate parental rights. Prior to the hearing, the attorney for the natural mother moved that the hearing be closed because of the extensive publicity the case had engendered. (Motion filed 12/1/86.) The guardian ad litem responded that the children had enjoyed the publicity and requested that the hearing remain open. (Resistance filed 12/3/86.) On December 9, 1986, the court ruled that the hearing would be open because there is no statutory authorization for closing termination proceedings under Iowa law. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 296.)

The termination hearing was held on December 12, 1986. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 313.) Testifying on behalf of the children, was John Frederick Tedesco of the Des Moines Child Guidance Center in Des Moines. Mr. Tedesco apparently had no contact with the children or mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 338.) He testified generally regarding bonding and its importance. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 324-325, 327.) He stated that even if bonding with a foster parent did occur, rebonding with a natural parent could occur. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 335.) He testified that he felt Department of Human Services' regulations did not address very well the situation where the natural parent ceases to be a real parent, and ties have been developed with "new" parents. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 338.) He felt that the regulations did not deal very well with the prospect of long term placements (Iowa S.Ct. App. 329), and were written from an adult point of view. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 329.)

Larry Lloyd, A.C.2's teacher, testified. He stated that A.C.2 used the last name of M. in school. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 353.) He said she was unhappy about the prospect of being moved from the M. home. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 349-350.)

Psychologist Eva Christiansen testified again at the termination hearing. She said that she had met with K.C. for an hour in October, and K.C. had asked her whether she should pursue reunification with the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 364.) Dr. Christiansen had told K.C. that she felt that it would be harmful if she did not. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 365.) Dr. Christiansen testified that, for a variety of reasons, she felt that termination would be a harmful course of action to pursue. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 369.) One reason was the children's need to come to affectionate, endearing terms with the natural parent, a need which had not been met here. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 369.) Dr. Christiansen testified that it is not uncommon for children to be bitter towards those who had abused them, but neither was it uncommon for them to overcome that bitterness. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 370.) She stated that it would be unfortunate if the children's ability to reconcile the anger and bitterness generated by poor treatment and care were somehow blocked. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 370.) When asked if that was, in fact, what had happened in this case, she said yes. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 371.) When asked directly if she knew of anything the M.'s did to harm the relationship between the children and their mother, she referred to their negative feelings towards the mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 362.) She stated that the children needed the support of people who would be neutral with regard to the outcome of the case. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 377.)

Psychiatrist Jerry Lewis, who had treated K.C. since 1984, testified. He affirmed that K.C. has an illness called bipolar disease. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 385.) Symptoms or manifestations of her disease included poor judgment, hallucinations, and increased energy. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 386.) The disease is cyclical - it comes and goes in cycles and then disappears altogether. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 388.) It is treated with medicine. Dr. Lewis stated that as long as K.C. stays with her medicine, maintains contact with psychiatrists and other treatment, her prognosis could be "pretty good". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 388.) When asked if she could take care of her children, he stated that it was his feeling that there was no psychiatric reason why she could not. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 389.)

Dr. Shahriari testified again in the termination hearing. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 403.) Dr. Shahriari discussed briefly his previous statements about the effect the foster parents were having on the efforts towards reunification. He stated that he had felt there was "an effort, perhaps a good faith effort, to disrupt the hope for reunification with K.C." (Iowa S.Ct. App. 423.) He remarked on the possible inappropriateness of having young children declaring their allegiance in this type of custody dispute, and on the fact that they might feel that by declaring allegiance to the biological parent, they are being disloyal to the foster parent. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 416.)

A.C.1 testified at the termination hearing. She stated that she does not care about K.C. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 455), and she doesn't care if she is better. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 453-455.) She would not cooperate with efforts towards her going back to K.C. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 429, 443.) She would engage in desperate behavior if forced to go back. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 429.) She wanted termination of parental rights. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 437.)

A.C.2's testimony was similar to that of her sister. She wanted termination (Iowa S.Ct. App. 460), and did not believe that K.C. will get better or be a good mom. (Iowa S.Ct. App.

460-462.) Like her sister, she did not approve of the Department of Human Services' efforts towards reunification. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 461.)

P.M., the foster mother, testified. She described the situation leading up to the decision to remove the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 477.) There was apparently some sort of dispute with regard to the frequency with which the children called their lawyer. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 478, 489.) She felt that the children were happy and well adjusted in her home. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 480.) She did not believe removal of the children from their home was in their best interests. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 489.) She stated that in the beginning she had a lot of hard feelings and bitterness towards K.C., but she had replaced them with understanding. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 493.) She admitted that it was possible that as early as two weeks into the foster placement she had made statements to fellow employees at work that she was going to keep the C. children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 501.)

The above-noted witnesses constituted the petitioner's case. At this point the natural mother called her witnesses. Phyllis Murphy-Christiansen, formerly a counselor at the Center for Personal Development in Ames, testified. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 530.) She worked with young adults in order to aid them with independent living. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 531.) She worked with K.C. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 532.) She described K.C. as initially grieving over the loss of her family but then progressing quickly because of her "above-average motivation in the program and in her achievement." (Iowa S.Ct. App. 532.) K.C. was extremely remorseful over the fact that her illness had created a bad situation for the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 535.) She was extremely fearful of losing her emotional bond with them. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 535-539.) She was encouraged to trust the promise that the Department had made, that if she fulfilled her goals as far as treatment, she would get her children back.

(Iowa S.Ct. App. 539.) Ms. Murphy-Christiansen stated that K.C. now felt betrayed because of the fact she was now facing termination of parental rights. She also expressed concern that she could never materially provide for her children like the foster parents could. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 548.)

Kathy Thompson, the case's long-time social worker, testified. She recommended against termination of parental rights. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 593.) She stated that this case is unusual "in the course of her employment" because of the progress made by the natural parent. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 631.) She conceded that her goal of reunification was contrary to the stated wishes of the children and the guardian ad litem. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 591-592, 608, 638.)

Ms. Thompson testified regarding the best interests of the children. She stated that, in her opinion, the children's best interests lie outside their current foster home (Iowa S.Ct. App. 275), and in reunification with the natural parent. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 316.) She stated that the "national" goal of social work is the rehabilitation and reunification of families (Iowa S.Ct. App. 318), but that the chief priority remains the best interest of the child. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 327.) She rated K.C.'s motivation to change as real high. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 578.) She stated that, in spite of all the distractions, K.C. had done well. She had not broken under the pressure. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 577.) She had pursued and received future means of financial support. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 577.) She was working on furthering her education. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 577.) She was working on parenting issues both in counseling and in Parents Anonymous. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 577.) Ms. Thompson felt that K.C. was capable of resuming a parental role "now or in the near future." (Iowa S.Ct. App. 579.)

Ms. Thompson described her relationship with the children. She said that she was the focus of their anger and that that was fine. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 312.) She stated that their anger was based on the fact that she was a link to K.C. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 627.) She opined that the foster parents felt threatened by this link, and part of the children's attitude might be explained by loyalty to the foster parents. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 627.) She stated that at the outset they were not resentful or hateful to the natural mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 572.) She stated that they soon changed. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 572.) According to her, L.M. had told the children that they shouldn't have to put up with visits, and that their behavior soon began to reflect that. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 572-573.) In her opinion, the children still have feelings for K.C. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 575.) She discussed the children's attempted "suicide" (they bought sleeping pills at a convenience store) and said she took it seriously. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 639.) She admitted that the removal had led to the threats, but when asked if the removal was the problem, she stated that "I can't erase from my mind what . . . in my opinion led up to the problem, which was an alienation, in my opinion, by the foster parents of the children's feelings toward their natural mother." (Iowa S.Ct. App. 644.) She agreed, however, that the children should not be moved to punish the foster parents. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 644.)

Ms. Thompson testified about the foster parents. They had not received the training foster parents now receive, because they had their license prior to the existence of the law providing for such training. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 634-635.) The children were removed from their care because they were not supportive of the case plan. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 636.) She stated that from the beginning they resisted being told how things should be done in terms of visits and contact and reunification with the mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 637.) She implied that their attitudes had affected the children at a time at which the children were easily influenced. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 626-627.)

Ms. Thompson's testimony also indicated something of her relationship with the guardian ad litem. It is clear that the former wishes to keep the children apprised of the goal of reunification, while the latter viewed that communication as threatening the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 615.) It is clear that the two engaged in heated discussions, during one of which the latter stated either that she would leave no stone unturned to keep the children from being returned to K.C., or that she stated she would leave no stone unturned before K.C.'s rights were terminated, depending on whose memory of the incident is clearer. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 609.) Finally, it is clear that this case evolved to the point where the former still believed that reunification with the parent was still a reasonable goal, while the latter saw the parent as an obstacle to be removed. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 329-330.)

Ms. Thompson's supervisor, Jerry Sawin, testified. He stated that the foster parents had consistently said one thing, and done another. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 686-687.) They had entered the children's life at a time when they were needy, and had really "hooked into them". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 687.) He stated that it would not be good to continue this kind of relationship. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 687.) He stated that he did not think it would be in the children's best interests to be adopted out, given his experience with adoptions that failed because of children later developing a concern about their natural parents. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 687.) Finally, he stated that, as a parent and a social worker, he felt it was inappropriate to allow ten- and eleven-year-olds to make life-altering decisions to the extent they had been encouraged to do in this case. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 687.) If termination occurred, he opined, the children's future would not be stable because of the presence of their natural fathers and the uncertainty of where they would be placed for adoption. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 689.) Mr. Sawin agreed and stated that the foster parents may have created some problems for these children by creating false hopes in them

(Iowa S.Ct. App. 715), and by placing inappropriate ties on them. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 704.)

K.C. testified. She acknowledged her mental illness and her need for her medicine. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 407.) She described her progress and her understanding of the value of friends, counseling and self-esteem. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 722.) She stated that she could live on her own now, but that she chose not to because she was told that, given the gap between she and her children, additional time would be preferable. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 732.) She stated that she would work very hard to restore the relationship with her children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 733.) When asked if she felt the system had failed her, she said it had failed "us". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 733.) She then indicated that it was not the system that had failed her, but the foster parents and guardian ad litem. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 733.)

The trial court issued its order on January 2, 1987. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 807.) The court first found that service had not been properly made on the natural fathers, so termination of their rights could not occur. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 803.) The court dismissed the termination of parental rights petition against the mother finding, inter alia, that the best interests of the children require the continuance of a plan to place them with their mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 807.) Notice of appeal was filed on January 7, 1987. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 808.)

On January 8, 1987, the Department removed the children from the foster home in order to place them near their mother. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 812.) That plan had been endorsed by the court in its termination order. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 806.) On January 21, 1987, the guardian ad litem again requested that the Department be removed as custodian because of this move. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 812.) Shortly thereafter, attorneys for the guardian ad litem began filing pleadings in this case indicating that there was a lawsuit against their client regarding the release of confidential information from the case, and that they needed to look at the transcripts. (Motion to Obtain Records, filed January 21, 1987.) The State did not resist the attorney's access to the transcripts. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 814-815.) However, the State did move for the removal of the guardian ad litem on the grounds that the lawsuit deprived her of her ability to exercise independent judgment on the children's behalf. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 814-815.) The motion was set for hearing along with a motion for a new evaluation of the children and a motion regarding the guardian ad litem's access to the children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 942.)

At the hearing regarding access to the children, the executive director of the private agency caring for the children testified. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 872.) He stated that his agency had monitored contacts between the guardian ad litem and children in order to determine whether those contacts worked the children into a high emotional state. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 874.) The agency's intent was that the attorney-child relationship not be of a sort that would again force the children to choose sides. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 876.) The director wanted their current placement to be a "mediary" one. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 875.) These concerns were explained to the guardian ad litem and, according to the director, she had no resistance to the monitoring at the time. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 875-877.) The director's concern was that at the times of the meetings with the guardian ad litem the children became very aggitated, anxious, hyper and wrapped up in the legal proceedings. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 878.) He was concerned that at those meetings they were encouraged to keep their legal battles as their primary point of thought, and to view them as "their last hope". (Iowa S.Ct. App. 878.) This concern was also reflected in the agency's report which was submitted at the hearing (Iowa S.Ct. App. 899.) The report stated that the children's contact with the guardian ad litem focused on the media and legal/political events in the case. (Pet. Ex. 1 of 2/16/87, p. 6.) The children were "taking literally", indications that they would return to the foster parents within the week. (Pet. Ex. 1 of 2/16/87, p. 6.) They then became frustrated when this didn't occur. (Pet. Ex. 1 of 2/16/87, p. 6.) The director opined that "there's no question that the continuation of the situation where they believe that someting different is going to happen from what we understand to be the court order to be prevents them from moving on with their life." (Iowa S.Ct. App. 880.)

The director of clinical services at the private agency also testified. She related the incident where, after one visit with the guardian ad litem, the children came away expecting to be back in the foster home within one week, and were disappointed when that did not occur. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 903-904.) She stated that when media "events" about the case were not occurring, the children would go back to their schoolwork and lead normal lives. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 897.)

The court issued its ruling on the motion to remove the guardian ad litem on February 17, 1987. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 938.) The court granted the motion on two grounds. First, it found that "if the guardian ad litem could demonstrate that it was not possible to successfully reunite the children with their natural mother, it would tend to justify her use of any and all means necessary to the success of her efforts to prevent removal of the children from a previous foster home, and to effect the termination of their mother's parental rights." (Iowa S.Ct. App. 938.) Second, the court found the guardian ad litem had exposed the children to the exploitation of the news media, disclosed information to the press regarding the children's new homes in violation of a previous agreement, and had failed to encourage the children to adapt to their new homes and to reunification. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 939.) Furthermore, the court stated that her meetings with the children had the effect of wiping out all progress made with the children and instilled them with false hopes and led to further disappointments. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 939.) The court concluded that their attorney appeared to be determined to act in a manner not in the children's best interests and ordered her removal. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 940.)

On November 25 of 1987, the Iowa Supreme Court issued its ruling in this matter. It ordered the termination of the mother's rights, but affirmed the trial court in all other respects. In February, 1988, the former guardian ad litem filed this petition.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT AGAINST GRANTING THE WRIT

The decision of the Iowa Supreme Court regarding the constitutional rights of foster families is consistent with the majority of the precedent on the issue. Petitioner's vague allegations concerning the injustice of her removal as guardian ad litem do not raise an issue suitable for review by the United States Supreme Court.

ARGUMENT AGAINST GRANTING THE WRIT

I. THE IOWA SUPREME COURT DID NOT ACT IMPROPERLY IN APPROVING THE REMOVAL FROM THE FOSTER HOME SO AS TO FACILITATE THE RETURN TO THE NATURAL PARENT.

In this case the trial court declined to interfere with the Iowa Department of Human Services' decision to remove these children from their foster home and to place them in another. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 235.) In a subsequent order, the court found that the foster parents had, within a few weeks of the children's placement, resolved to obtain permanent custody of the children and had endeavored to obtain that objective. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 805.) It found that the foster parents had violated their obligations and trust as foster parents in order to gratify their own personal wishes to have children. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 806.) Accordingly, the trial court declined to transfer custody of the children from the Iowa Department of Human Services to the foster parents, and allowed the Department to effectuate its plan to move the children to foster homes that were physically closer to the natural mother, and which would be less disruptive of the children's then-existing relationship with her. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 235, 807.)

In approving this decision, the Iowa Supreme Court stated:

> It should be apparent that one of the paramount needs of a child living under the stress of such unfortunate circumstances is to be free from direct or indirect proposals by those sheltering them to make the association permanent. To some it may seem innocent, even a good thing, to offer a permanent love to a child under temporary care. But unselfish temporary parents recognize that such bonding is not kind. On the contrary it tends to be selfish on the part of the adults and is highly likely to be harmful to the child.
> Temporary foster relationships must be designed with the knowledge they will almost certainly end in separation. The children often return to their natural parents. Often another solution must be found. Separation from foster parents holds the potential to be a painful experience. Such a separation would become unnecessarily cruel if the foster parents have led the children to believe placement in their home was permanent.
> We agree with the juvenile court's conclusion that it was in the best interests of the children to change their place> ment from the [M.'s]. Parental rights of the mother were very much in issue at the time placement was ordered changed. The three fathers of the children were not yet subject to the court's jurisdiction. Options for the children's future had to be kept open. It was crucial that the children be under the care of foster parents who could and would refrain from seeking to bond a permanent relationship.

(Petition App. 12.) The court then made three key rulings, the latter two of which form the basis of this petition. Those rulings were:

1) that Iowa law does not create an expectation that a foster family relationship will be permitted to continue (Petition App. 14);

2) that there was no due process violation in moving the children from the foster home (Petition App. 13);

3) that the children were not denied equal protection under the law by said removal, because even under a strict analysis, the State has a compelling interest in removing the children from a foster home which is discouraging reunfication with the natural parent. (Petition App. 15.)

The respondent State would assert that those constitutional holdings were appropriate, and in line with the majority of the precedent on these issues. Accordingly, review is not appropriate under Supreme Court Rule 17.1(b) and (c), as said holdings are consistent with, not in defiance of, the existing case law. Generally, case law holds that where state law does not provide foster parents with an expectation of keeping the foster family together, constitutional considerations do not either. Kyees v. County Department of Public Welfare, 600 F.2d 693, 698 (7th Cir. 1979); Drummond v. Fulton County Department of Family & Children's Services, 563 F.2d 1200, 1206-07 (5th Cir. 1977) (en banc), cert. denied, 437 U.S. 910, 98 S.Ct. 3103, 57 L.Ed.2d 1141 (1978); Sherrard v. Owens, 484 F.Supp. 728, 740-41 (W.D. Mich. 1980), *affd.*644 F.2d 542 (6th Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 828, 102 S.Ct. 120, 70 L.Ed.2d 103 (1981); Crim v. Harrison, 552 F.Supp. 37 (N.D. Miss. 1982); see also Backlund v. Barnhart, 778 F.2d 1386 (1986) (suggesting Ninth Circuit is leaning towards this position). Brown v. San Joaquin, 601 F.Supp. 653 (E.D. Cal. 1985), is the exception, not the rule, and may be distinguished as it relied upon certain California statutes, which, unlike the Iowa Juvenile Code, clearly create in foster parents an expectation that their relationship with the child be preserved. 601 F.Supp. at 660.

The Iowa Supreme Court found that Iowa's state law does not provide foster parents with such an expectation. The weakness of petitioner's assertions to the contrary are demonstrated by the fact that, as proof of such an expectation, petitioner can only cite to a statute which gives a previous foster family the right to be considered as placements if return to the biological family is not contemplated. Iowa Code § 232.102(6). There is no statute or holding giving foster parents any such expectation when return to the natural parent is still a possibility. In fact, the Iowa Administrative Code precludes appeals of specific foster care placement issues. 441 I.A.C. 7.5(5)(d).

The ruling of the Iowa Supreme Court was proper and is not a proper subject for review by this Court.

II. THE PETITION DOES NOT ESTABLISH THAT THE IOWA SUPREME COURT DISREGARDED PRINCIPLES OF FEDERAL LAW REGARDING THE RIGHTS OF PERSONS IN STATE CUSTODY.

Under this division, the petitioner sets forth several general statements regarding the rights of children or other individuals, but does not apply those statements to any of the specific facts or findings in this case. Rather, the petitioner offers generalized statements such as "juveniles have rights to freedom of expression" and leaves the Court the task of sifting through the thousand-page record of this two-year-old case in order to find facts or incidents to which such propositions apply. Obviously, response to this type of legal argument is difficult. The State's initial response must be that the setting forth of a string of largely unrelated legal propositions concerning federal rights does not, in and of itself, constitute an argument for the granting of Supreme Court review under Supreme Court Rule 17. Petitioner has not specified what rights have been violated, nor who has violated them. The Court is left in the dark as to whether any of the accusations made in this division relate to actual events, and, if they do, as to whether any of those events are recorded in the record. All the Court has to go by is the fact that the assertion of the rights was somehow precluded by removal of the guardian ad litem. The respondent State of Iowa would submit that the lack of specificity here should be fatal to the petition, as the argument does not provide the Court with any means of assessing whether important federal issues were raised in this case.

It can be argued, of course, that while the argument in Division II does not set forth any specific challenges to the Iowa court actions, it does implicitly contain certain vague assertions regarding the First and Sixth Amendment rights of juveniles, and does suggest that those rights were somehow violated in this case. These assertions seem to derive chiefly from the fact that this particular guardian ad litem was removed as the legal representative of the children in interest. It might, therefore, be useful to reiterate why that removal occurred. The trial court found that the guardian ad litem: 1) continually exposed the children to the news and entertainment media; 2) disclosed information regarding their new foster homes against the wishes of the court; 3) encouraged the children to focus on the media, legal and political events surrounding the case rather than reunification with their natural parent; 4) encouraged the children to write their former foster home concerning problems in their new one; 5) effectively "wiped out" the children's progress towards stabilization with each visit; and 6) put the children in an adversarial position in their own neglect proceeding. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 939-940.) The court noted that the guardian ad litem maintained the right under the First Amendment to make any statement in public, regardless of the confidentiality that is normally maintained in juvenile cases. See Iowa Code §§ 217.30 and 232.147 (1985) (providing for confidentiality of social services and juvenile court information); See also 42 U.S.C. 671(8) (providing that states who operate federally funded foster care programs must restrict disclosure of information regarding individuals served by these programs.) The trial court ordered the removal of the guardian ad litem not because these activities violated legal and ethical standards, which they may have, but because these activities had the effect of harming the children before the court. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 939). See Matter of Welfare of B.B.B., 393 N.W.2d 436 (Minn. App. 1986) (Minnesota case holding that standard for removal of guardian ad litem is best interest of the child.) Ultimately, this was a case where the children had to be protected from their legal representative. Accordingly, it is not a good case for examining the rights of foster care children vis-a-vis state agencies. Such an examination should be reserved for a case where the children's interests, as opposed to the guardian ad litem's interests or the foster parents' interests, are more adequately represented.

III. THIS CASE DOES NOT PRESENT A CONTEXT FOR EXERCISE OF THE SUPREME COURT'S SUPERVISORY POWERS.

It is difficult to respond to petitioner's argument under this issue. The heading makes reference to the supervisory powers of the United States Supreme Court, but those powers are not referred to thereafter. What those powers are, and how they should be exercised, is not specified. Instead, general allegations of injustice are made without elucidation on how those allegations apply to the facts of this case, if they do at all. The two basic themes of the allegations seem to be: 1) that the Iowa juvenile justice system improperly favors the rights of natural families over those of foster families; 2) that the removal of the children's guardian ad litem was an improper sanctioning of an attorney who was zealously representing her clients. As the first theme has been dealt with in the first division of this brief, the respondent State of Iowa will focus on the second theme in this one.

As stated in the second division, the respondent State would assert that the removal of the guardian ad litem, which occurred long after the removal of the children from the foster home, was necessary. At the time, the trial court had before it the testimony of officials of the private agency caring for the children stating that the children became very anxious and agitated after meeting with their attorney. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 878.) That testimony indicated that the children left those meetings with the impression that they would be returning to the M. foster home within the week. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 878.) The children were apparently encouraged to focus on the guardian ad litem's legal battle to return them to the foster home, and to view that battle as their last hope. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 878-879.) This prevented them from living normal lives in the community, and from getting on with their activities and school work. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 897.)

The trial court also had before it the history of this case wherein children who had entered foster care with no particular animosity towards the mother who had mistreated them ended up requesting termination in open court, despite evidence that allowing them to take sides in such a controversy was not in their best interest. (Iowa S.Ct. App. 416, 457, 572.) Furthermore, the trial court had before it the recommendation of an independent board overseeing Iowa foster care placements that the best interests of these children required removal of the guardian ad litem. (Report of Iowa Foster Care Review Board, dated February 12, 1987.)

Finally, the court had before it evidence that a lawsuit was occurring wherein the guardian ad litem might be forced to defend the release of arguably confidential information regarding her clients. A normal part of that defense would include stressing the inappropriateness of reunification and the need to resort to heavy publicity to prevent that eventuality. Therefore, the guardian ad litem would have a private legal and pecuniary interest in opposing reunification. Such an interest might interfere with advocacy of the children's best interests.

Those factors and others clearly indicate that the rulings of the trial court and Iowa Supreme Court on this issue were necessary to protect the five C. children and to protect the integrity of this particular juvenile action.

CONCLUSION

For those reasons, the petition for writ of certiorari should be denied. The factual peculiarities of this case render it an inappropriate vehicle for deciding the foster care issues left open in Smith v. Organization of Foster Families, 431 U.S. 816, 97 S.Ct. 2094, 53 L.Fd. 2d 14 (1977).
